

Mobile Apps & Websites for Library Research

Denise O'Shea,
Head of Access Services & Systems
Sprague Library

Introduction

- Smartphones, iPads and other hand-held devices have become an integral part of our everyday lives.
- On campus, these mobile devices are widely embraced to enhance teaching and learning, and research...
- Making library resources searchable and delivered to all users no matter where they are physically located and what Internet devices they use is definitely a challenge today.

Free Library Apps Currently Available at MSU

BookMyne – search MSU library catalog, link to your library account, renew books, request books, check library hours.

EbscoHost – all-in-one search for library catalog and databases.

Ebrary – read library eBooks, login via Facebook. Requires an Adobe ID to download books. Can copy/print material.

Gale My Library College Edition – mobile access to ebooks & databases from Gale.

Science Direct – search Science Direct Database. Save and email articles.

Naxos Music Library – stream content to your iPhone or Android device.

Not an App But Still Mobile

JSTOR Mobile -- not really an app or a mobile site. JSTOR has optimized the JSTOR interface to automatically adapt to the size of the device. Try it out at www.jstor.org.

Lexis Nexis Academic Mobile -- provides access to the full text database of news, business, and legal sources with some medical information as well: <http://www.lexisnexis.com/hottopics/lnacademic/mobile/>

SAGE's entire collection of online journal sites is now available in a mobile-optimized format designed for the smaller screen of a smartphone.

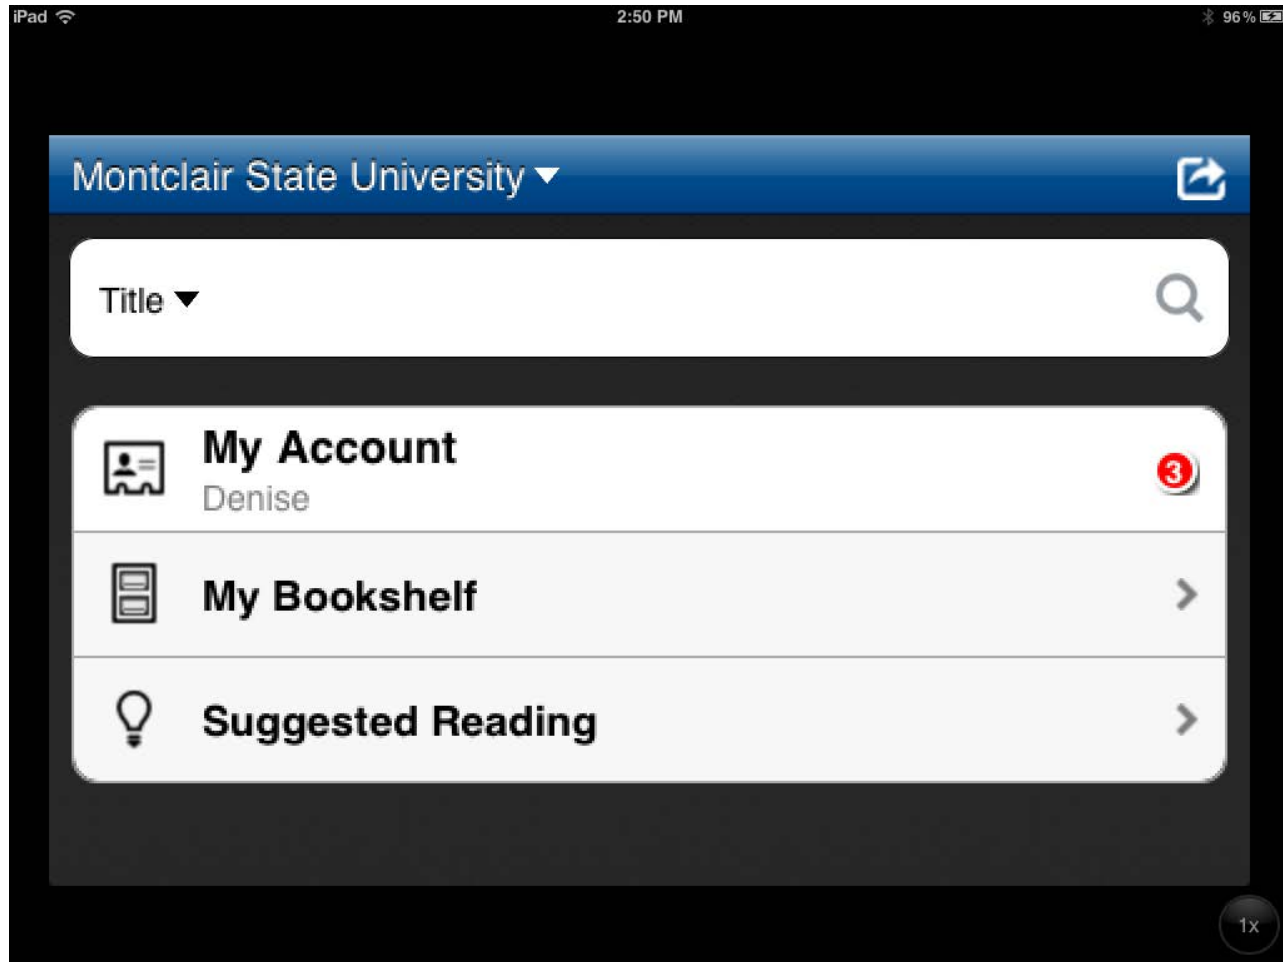

WorldCat Mobile -- A catalog of thousands of libraries worldwide. To use your mobile phone to find materials in libraries near you, point your device's browser to <http://worldcatmobile.org/?site=www>

BookMyne Catalog App

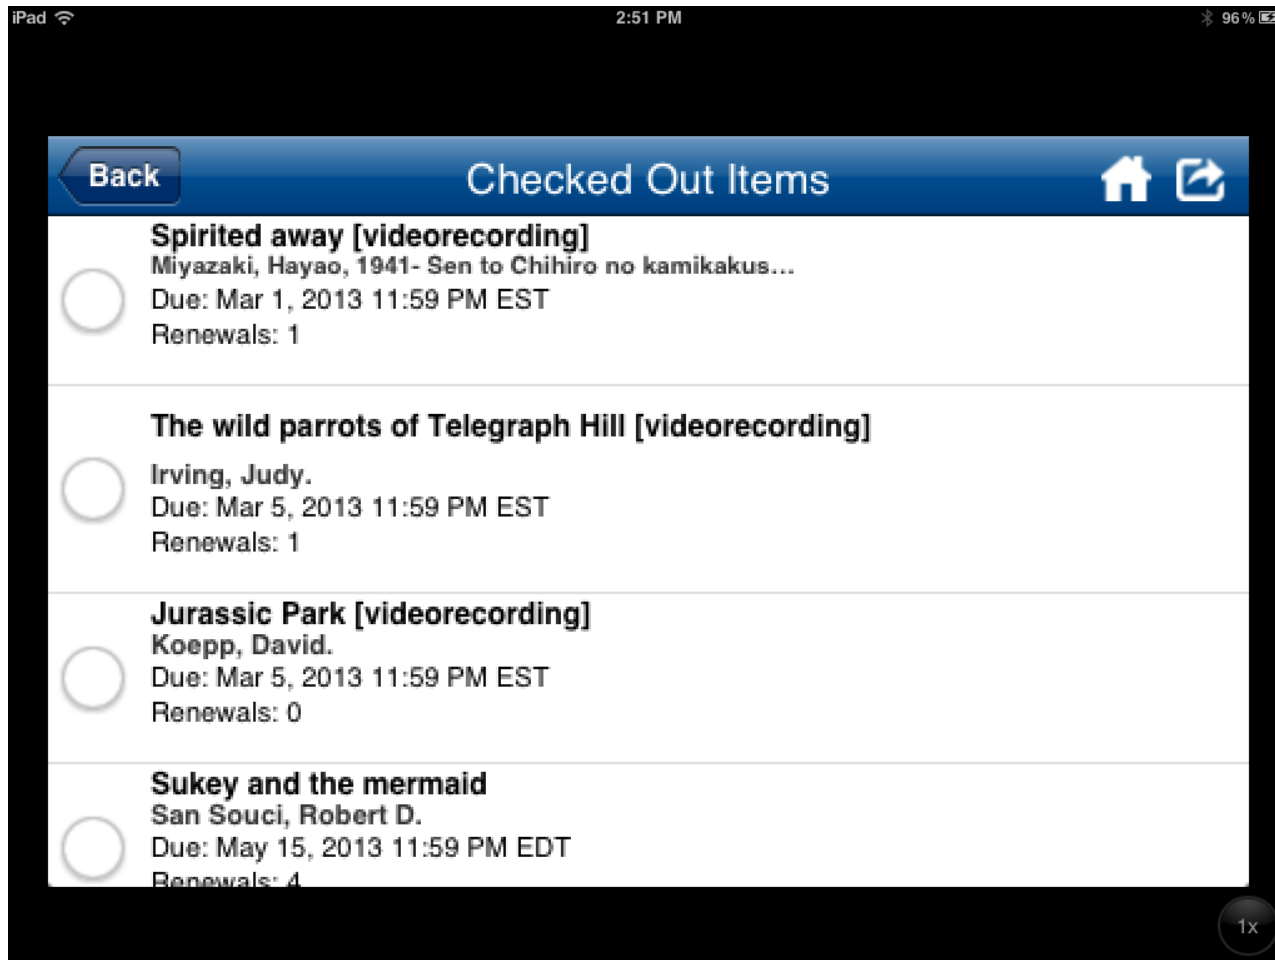

- BookMyne lets you:
 - Search our catalog
 - Place holds on available materials
 - Log into your account and renew items you have checked out
 - Set reminders for when items are due
 - Create Personal Bookshelves
 - Check Library Hours
 - Contact the Library via email or phone directly from your device

B BACKGROUND: Rice can be a major source of inorganic arsenic (As_i) for many subpopulations. Rice products are also used as ingredients in prepared foods, some of which may not be obviously rice based. Organic brown rice syrup (OBRS) is used as a sweetener in organic food products as an alternative to high-fructose corn syrup. We hypothesized that OBRS introduces As into these products.

C OBJECTIVE: We determined the concentration and speciation of As in commercially available brown rice syrups and in products containing OBRS, including toddler formula, cereal/energy bars, and high-energy foods used by endurance athletes.

M METHODS: We used inductively coupled plasma mass spectrometry (ICP-MS) and chromatography coupled to ICP-MS to determine total As (As_{total}) concentrations and As speciation in products purchased via the Internet or in stores in the Hanover, New Hampshire, area.

D DISCUSSION: We found that OBRS can contain high concentrations of As_i and dimethylarsine (DMA). An “organic” toddler milk formula containing OBRS as the primary ingredient had As concentrations up to six times the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency safe drinking water limit. Cereal bars and high-energy foods containing OBRS also had higher As concentrations than equivalent products that did not contain OBRS. As_i was the main As species in most food products tested in this study.

C CONCLUSIONS: There are currently no U.S. regulations applicable to As in food, but our findings suggest that the OBRS products we evaluated may introduce significant concentrations of As_i into an individual’s diet. Thus, we conclude that there is an urgent need for regulatory limits on As in food.

K KEY WORDS: arsenic, baby formula, brown rice syrup, cereal bars, energy bars, organic food, speciation. Environ Health Perspect 120:623–626 (2012). <http://dx.doi.org/10.1289/ehp.1104>

Playlist Tips

It is quite simple to create a new playlist from a subset of the tracks in another playlist. Select a playlist, check the boxes of the tracks to include in a new playlist and then select "Save As" from the top menu section. After creating the new playlist you may want to optionally Delete the still selected tracks from the original playlist.
